Beech Grove

An attractive example of Ancient Woodland in rural Oxfordshire, 1½ hours' drive from London and 9 miles from junction 12 of the M4.

Beech Grove, Woodcote, Oxfordshire

Description

Beech Grove sits in a peaceful part of Oxfordshire, located just south of Woodcote village and is part of a wider forested area known as Birchen Copse. Sloping gently to the northeast, the copse sits among fertile loamy clay soils, ideal for the majestic beech dominating the location. The woodland was historically managed for its good timber crop to service the once prosperous furniture industry in nearby High Wycombe.

Beneath the mature canopy, holly, birch and the occasional sweet chestnut complement the tall stems of beech. There is also a good amount of strong beech regeneration (the seedlings and saplings are shade tolerant, a common species trait after early establishment).

Lush green brachythecium moss provides a pleasant covering of the woodland floor with some remarkable colourful fungi that appear during the latter parts of the year. These include oyster mushroom, fly agaric and scarlet elf cup. Rich populations of wildlife can also be seen and heard including badger, the long-eared owl, common dormouse, roe and muntjac deer.

This manageable woodland offers huge scope for a weekend woodsperson and benefits from good access, serviced by a hard track suitable for a 2WD drive vehicle.

If It Were Mine

I would certainly yield some beech wood to then chip for my meat smoker at home, perhaps smoking some locally sourced venison! I would also clear a few of the attractive open spaces for camping during the warmer months, taking advantage of this tranquil location.

Please remember some management operations require approval and/or a licence.
