Meikle Copse, Midmar, Torphins, Aberdeenshire

Description

Meikle Copse occupies the central part of a larger broadleaved wood in a private location midway between two of Scotland's most famous salmon rivers; the Dee and the Don. It lies on moderate north-facing slopes with views across to the Pitfichie Hills. Aberdeen is 40 minutes to the east and Cairngorms National Park a similar distance to the southwest. Banchory and other Royal Deeside villages are about 20 minutes to the south. The immediate vicinity is a largely undiscovered haven.

This well-managed wood, comprised of native broadleaf species, was planted on former grazing land in 2005. The trees are now established and growing well above a grass sward which affords easy pedestrian access to most areas. The mixture is dominated by oak, birch and ash, plus a speckling of rowan and occasional shrub species like hazel and hawthorn.

The growing stems afford shelter to the roe deer that now frequent the wider wood. The evolving woodland habitat is also increasingly attracting a range of woodland songsters and we also noted a range of other birds including woodcock, pheasant, herons and geese, along with the calls of moorland birds like curlew and lapwing in fields nearby.

Meikle Copse is served by a new stone track providing 2WD access to an 'in-wood' parking area at its end. As the wood approaches production phase this track will also serve for the extraction of forest produce.

In the meantime the new owner can enjoy steering the development of this young and secluded property which offers a most attractive and affordable route into woodland ownership.

If It Were Mine

The growing trees no longer need protective guards, so an early job would be their removal. The open grass area on the upper southern edge would make a lovely BBQ area and campsite, especially with the addition of a small deck.
